Although, as Evers points out, a number of writers including Slavoj Žižek and Adrian Johnson have sought to “ ‘ materialise ’ the legacy of German idealism through an attention to the psychoanalytic theory of Jacques Lacan and in particular through his theory of the subject ”, 7 there still seems to be a tendency in Lacanian circles to treat the signifier as some form of transcendental entity. And bearing in mind that the Lacanian subject is, to a large extent, a product of the ...
