The end came in different ways, but the crossing of the frozen River Rhine on the last day of AD 406 by a force of Suebi, Vandals, and Alemanni marked the beginning of the end of the Western Roman Empire. The frontier installations were swept aside, as they had been on previous occasions – a sharp reminder that their purpose was frontier control: the defence of the empire rested on the power of the army in fighting – and winning – pitched battles.

The Roman – Persian Wars, also known as the Roman – Iranian Wars, were a series of conflicts between states of the Greco-Roman world and two successive Iranian empires: the Parthian and the Sasanian. Battles between the Parthian Empire and the Roman Republic began in 54 BC; wars began under the late Republic, and continued through the Roman (later Byzantine) and Sasanian empires.

Vespasian, the last of the four emperors standing, remedied this by commissioning a road that crossed the rivers, creating a short cut between the two regions. Thereafter, permanent military bases in the area multiplied until, in Germany as in Britain, the existing security arrangements were consolidated into a formal frontier line by the Emperor Hadrian (AD 117-138).
